INTERNATIONAL

- In a historic move, the California State Senate passed a legislation that would ban caste-based discrimination in the State
- Senator Aisha Wahab, the first Muslim and Afghan-American elected to the state legislature, introduced the bill, SB 403, last month.
- The bill, passed by 34-1 vote, would make California the first US state to add caste as a protected category in its anti-discrimination laws
- In California, caste discrimination occurs across industries, including technology, education, construction, restaurants, domestic work, and medicine, according to civil rights organisation Equality Labs, one of the proponents of the bill.
- California is the largest state in the United States in terms of population and size of the economy.
- Earlier this year, Seattle became the first US city to outlaw caste discrimination after its local council passed a resolution moved by an Indian-American politician Kshama Sawant.
- New York City is set to become the largest US city to ban discrimination based on a person's weight.
- ✓ On May 11, the New York City council approved a bill that adds a person's weight to the list of characteristics that are protected from discrimination, along with race, gender, age, religion and sexual orientation.
- The law would prohibit employers and businesses from discriminating in employment, housing and access to public accommodations.
- ✓ The bill was approved by 44 of the city council's 51 members
- Michigan and Washington states already prohibit the discrimination, as do some cities, like Washington DC.
- The bill also prohibits discrimination based on height, and a separate bill would ban discrimination against people with tattoos.

 Under the bill, complaints about weight discrimination would be investigated by the city's commission on human rights, which already handles complaints over race, gender and pregnancy.
